Nelody has ever accused Mr. Sage of pe sonal vanity, except in connection with h whisters. They have been his pride for year and the amount of care and nursing that I has bestowed upon them is well known to h intimates.

In his younger days they were full and luxuriant and of a sunshiny amber tint. Latterly, however, they have thinned out considerably, and wherever the natural color was visible it was seen that they had a dingy white shade.

· Uncle Russ " has employed every means to conceal this indication of advancing years, and all the ingenuity of the dyers art has been expended in giving a rich, dark justre to the straggling hairs. Sometimes the artist has been more suc-cessful than at others, but it may be stated

Sometimes the artist has been more successful than at others, but it may be stated in a general way that in the last score of years "I tele Russ's" beard has assumed at intervals every known shade of color, from a royal purple to a jet black.

Mr. Sage resents any inquiry as to the reason for shaving off his whiskers, but simply says that he thinks he looks better as he is now. The change certainly makes bim look twenty years younger, and it is whispered among his friends that he has some deep ulterfor design, which will appear later on.

He can certainly make a considerable saving on chemicals and dysauffs, for he was never known to let a barber shave even his upper lip, and, in view of his wel-known habits of frugality, this may furnish sufficient motive for the sacrifice of this object of long-continued selicitude.

At the same time he will be relieved of much anxiety of mind, and during the heated term which has just set in, will undoubtedly experience much comfort and personal sattefaction from the change.

A heavy freight train, which was running down grade, parted near the centre. The rear cars left the rails and were piled one upon the other, completely blocking trailic from either direction.

The cast-bound track was cleared at 2 o'clock this morning. No one was hurt.

A landslide at Tarrytown last evening blocked west-bound trailic on the New York Central for a short time.

The thunderstorms of the afternoon had softened the earth at a point where the company is building a new bridge over the track at Heskman avenue. The landslide resulted, covering the track with gravel and rocks.

The Chicago limited stopped when it reached the washout, and a wrecking train from Peckskill, which was following close behind, run that the rear cars smassing the car platform and the pilot of the engine. None of the passengers were injured. a" saft a prominent Tammany man to-
